ASUM referendum fails due to low voter turnout

By Jerry Wright
Kaimin Staff Reporter

The referendum to hold new ASUM elections was defeated yesterday by a lack of voter turnout.

Only 9 percent of the students voted, far short of the 25 percent turnout required for a referendum to be official. Had 25 percent of the students voted, two-thirds of them would have had to approve of the referendum for its passage.

"Apathy has won," Andy Stroble, a member of Students for Honest Elections, said when he first heard the results.

Students For Honest Elections was the group that circulated petitions calling for the referendum. The group was formed in response to allegations that last quarter's ASUM elections were conducted unfairly.

In the referendum, 695 people voted, 560 of them in favor of invalidating the election, and 135 not in favor.

ASUM President David Bolinger said the "dismal" turnout was partially because most people realized not voting was the same as voting against the referendum. There were a lot of people who chose not to vote because they didn't want to even legitimize the referendum, he added.

"I still think it was a waste of money," Bolinger said.

Problems with the computer system used to check voter eligibility kept one of the three announced polling places from ever opening up.

At the polling place in the Liberal Arts Building a telephone hook-up to the computer could not be made to fit. There was a complaint that from about 9:50-10:30 there was no sign directing voters to one of the other two polling places in the Lodge and in the University Center.

Elections Committee Chairman Dan Hallsten said he got a sign up as soon as he could at about 10:45. He later said that the number of people that vote in the L.A. Building in past elections is always fewer than at the other two polling places.

Vigil commemorates Kent, Jackson State

By Nola Gerth
Kaimin Contributing Reporter

The Kent State killings could have happened at the University of Montana 13 years ago and could still happen today. Butch Turk, a UM junior in philosophy and economics, said yesterday at a vigil in front of the ROTC building commemorating the event.

About 100 people of all ages gathered in memory of the six students killed by Ohio State National Guardsmen and Mississippi highway patrolmen in anti-war demonstrations at Kent and Jackson State universities.

On the Kent State campus, National Guardsmen fired on hundreds of protesting students. At the demonstration, which took place May 4, 1970, in Kent, Ohio, four students were killed: Sandy Lee Scheuer, 20, of Youngstown, Ohio; Jeffrey Miller, 20, of Plainview, N.Y.; Allison Krause, 19, of Pittsburg, and William Schroeder, 19, of Lorain, Ohio.

Less than two weeks later, on May 15, highway patrolmen fired upon protesters at Jackson State University in Jackson, Miss., this time killing two black students.

Those attending the vigil yesterday formed a large circle on the lawn and joined hands for about five minutes of silence and prayer while chimes from the tower of UM's Main Hall played in the background.

Copies of a song written by a Kent State student about the killings were passed out and the crowd joined in, some with spirit, others more subdued.

"If you can work for freedom, I can, too," they sang.

Following the song, a few people in the circle spoke — some who had been students at the time of the killings and had been involved in student protests and others who were younger but had heard and felt the impact.

UM student Bob Stone said he had been extremely upset at what had happened at Kent State.

"It affected me a lot," he said. "I guess you think that it can't happen in your country."

"We were learning not to trust our government but we didn't realize how bad it could be."

"Even more shocking was the way the American people took it. They weren't as upset as they should have been."

Jerry Kram, a graduate student in environmental studies, was only nine at the time of the Kent and Jackson State killings.

"I was really impacted by the ideas of the '60s," he said. "This was one of the major events of that time period."

"Some paid an extremely high price."

CB allocates funds for summer

By Jerry Wright
Kaimin Staff Reporter

Eleven ASUM groups and organizations received their budgets for the Summer Session last night when Central Board allocated the $16,696 it had in its coffers.

ASUM Programming and the Wilderness Institute got the lion's share of the money, receiving $3,850 and $3,571 respectively. The two groups had also requested the most funding.

Two groups, Draft Counseling and the Montana Kaimin got no funding.

CB began the budgeting session with the executive recommendation of how much funding each group should receive. CB members then made motions to take away or add to the recommended funding level of an individual group. After discussion, the entire board voted whether to approve the motion. After 15 motions and two-and-one-half hours budgeting was completed.

A total of $2,200 was taken from six groups, including $900 from Programming, to begin the session. Then $2,000 was given by a unanimous vote to the Wilderness Institute.

Bill Reker, director of Programming, said the $900 cut will mean some new programs he had planned for this summer, including a possible concert at Caras Park, may have to be cut.

John Mercer, coordinator of the Field Studies program at the Wilderness Institute, had earlier said the recommendation for Wilderness Institute would have meant abolishing the Field Studies Program.

"I appreciate the support these people gave us," he said of CB.

Only two groups, UM Dance Ensemble and Phoenix, were given the entire amount they had requested.

Following is the final results of budgeting:

ASUM group or organization	1983 Allocation
ASUM Programming.....	$3,850
ASUM Student Gardens.....	$250
Campus Recreation.....	$3,200
Campus Recreation Fac.....	$3,500
UM Dance Ensemble.....	$300
Montana Masquers.....	$1,000
Phoenix.....	$250
Wilderness Institute.....	$3,571
Women's Resource Center.....	$975

Haggard canceled

Tonight's Merle Haggard concert has been canceled because Haggard is sick, Victor Gotesman, ASUM program manager, said last night.

Gotesman said people who have already bought tickets for the concert may get refunds at the University Center box office starting Monday. About 2,000 tickets to the concert have been sold.

Haggard performed in Great Falls last night but has canceled the rest of his tour, Gotesman said. The show may be rescheduled but Gotesman said no specifics were given by Haggard's manager.

You blew it

About 91 percent of you people blew it. While some of you were in the Oval working on your tans, you could've been working on your integrity as ASUM voters. But no, you blew it.

Kaimin Editorial

Yesterday's referendum deciding whether last quarter's bogus elections were to be invalidated, received the attention of only about nine percent of this campus' students. The rest must have been out playing hackey-sack, throwing Frisbees, sleeping or just too busy to take two minutes out of their schedules to vote. Only two of the three election booths were open but that's still no excuse. How long does it take you to walk from the Liberal Arts building (the location of the downed booth) to the Lodge or the University Center? For something this important, you should've taken the time.

It had been well established that last quarter's elections were determined through unethical voting practices such as electioneering and people voting twice. Yesterday, you had a chance to say you didn't approve of that kind of BS but the vast majority of you didn't, which suggests that you don't care how people on this campus are given the responsibility of making policy and spending your money.

Some of you are thinking, "Well, why should I care?" Well, fool, someone who is incompetent or corrupt could get a hold of your activity fee, which has recently been raised another $2, and through mismanagement or theft, rip you off. Are you making enough money so that you can afford to be ripped off? Probably not.

There seems to be an attitude floating around this campus that student government here is a joke. Well, if it is, it's because apathetic people (such as those who thought voting was a joke) allow it to happen. Voting is your vehicle to ensure things are done efficiently and ethically around here. But you abused that right yesterday and you abused it last quarter when only 16 percent of you turned out for the original election.

Well, maybe next election you'll get your acts together. But looking at this trend of apathy, it appears most of you are content with going with the flow. What a bunch of sheep.

Good news/bad news

When was the last time you felt happy after reading a report on Montana highway fatalities? I can't say I ever have either, but the state Highway Patrol's report for 1982 does contain a bit of good news.

Though 254 people died on Montana roads in 1982, that total was the lowest the state has seen since 1963 and a 24.9 percent decrease from 1981.

In 1981 a traffic fatality occurred every 27.6 hours. Last year the time between deaths increased to one fatality every 34.5 hours.

Such a significant drop in the death total is little cause for cheers, however, especially when we realize a little "preventive medicine" could have trimmed the total even more.

Take seatbelts, for instance. I can hear you now: "They're so uncomfortable," "You can't sleep when you're wearing them," "I'm only going to the grocery store and besides, I can't find them."

I'm guilty too, but this bit of information caught my eye: only five of those 254 who died were wearing seatbelts.

And here's something for you motorcyclists who hate to muss your hair by wearing a helmet: of the 18 people killed in motorcycle accidents in 1982, 15 weren't wearing helmets.

But the biggest killer in 1982, as in all other years, was alcohol. Though Col. Robert Landon, Highway Patrol administrator, attributed the decrease in highway deaths to stepped-up efforts to control drunken driving, 53 percent of those who died had been drinking.

That's why citizens rallying against drunken driving should be applauded and that's why state officials should do anything in their power to impose stricter penalties for that crime.

Well, almost anything. Attorney General Mike Greely went too far this week when he said Montana needs a law allowing enforcement officials to confiscate upon arrest the drivers' licenses of those stopped for drunk driving.

While certainly drunk drivers should be kept off the highways, they too are entitled to the right of innocence until proven guilty.

And what about the right of the consumer to products that don't risk his safety? Apparently General Motors thinks that right is a trivial one.

The company has declined to recall 5.3 million cars now on the highway, even though the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration found that a defect in those cars could cause the rear axles to separate.

Although several GM car owners have reported just such incidents, the company apparently remains unconcerned.

Thomas Mathues, a GM vice president, says those reports represent "an isolated incident now and then" that would result from "rare and excessive wear" on the axles' end buttons.

What does he mean, "rare and excessive wear?" Need we remind Mathues that the days of a new car every year have gone the way of the Model T?

People are driving their cars longer before buying new ones. Unfortunately, that's not a reflection of the quality of American automobiles, but of the quality of the American economy.

If Mathues thinks excessive wear on GM autos won't result from this trend, he must not have weathered the recession as successfully as his company did.

Forest Service outlaws Pattee Canyon drinking parties

By Rick Parker
Kaimin Reporter

The recent ban on "keggers" in the Missoula Ranger District applies to any group "essentially there for the primary purpose of drinking." Tom Spolar, district recreation manager, said Tuesday.

The ban, announced by District Ranger Fred Trevey last week, covers all of the 600,000 acres of national forest in the Missoula district.

Spolar said enforcement of the new policy would be heaviest within a ten-mile radius of Missoula and particularly in the Pattee Canyon area.

Enforcement will be provided by the Missoula County Sheriff's Department. Undersheriff Dan Magone said the department would be running extra patrols in Pattee Canyon during the nighttime hours.

The vague definition of a "kegger" makes things "a little difficult," Magone said. He said patrolmen would "have to rely on common sense."

If a "kegger" is discovered, the people involved will be told to leave. Arrests will be made only if the people refuse to leave or if minors are involved, Magone said.

Spolar said the ban on "keggers" is not meant to disrupt family outings. "There probably isn't a picnic that occurs in which some type of alcohol isn't involved," he said. "The main purpose is to control drunk driving on roads that weren't built to handle such a large volume of traffic."

The new policy was initiated when residents of Pattee Canyon began to complain about the traffic problems connected with "keggers" in the area.

Nancy Erickson, one Canyon resident, met with officials from the forest service and county two weeks ago to discuss the problem. The following week, the ban was announced, citing "kegger" related traffic problems as a primary reason.

Included in the ban was the closing of the Crazy Canyon Road located behind Mount Sentinel. Spolar said that traffic problems associated with "keggers" has been "particularly bad in Crazy Canyon."

The road, which is now barricaded by a padlocked gate, will remain open to foot travel and to those receiving a special permit, such as Missoula's hang gliding club. The road may be opened during winter months to permit the access of cross-country skiers, Spolar said.

University of Montana senior Larry Oshanick, who had to relocate a "kegger" he planned to hold in Pattee Canyon this Saturday, said he agrees with the intent of the ban for traffic safety, but thinks that "the national forest is supposed to be for everybody, not just the people who live there."

UM phonathon tops goal of $20,000

By Timothy Huneck
Kaimin Contributing Reporter

A nationwide phonathon being conducted to raise money for the University of Montana Excellence Fund has already raised $23,000 — surpassing its goal by $3,000 — after only one week, according to Gayle Walton, assistant director of the UM Foundation.

Each week night since April 26, volunteers have been contacting out-of-state alumni and encouraging them to donate money to UM, Walton said. She said the main goal of the phonathon is to increase the number of people who donate to UM on a regular basis, adding that people are more reluctant to donate the first time and "are more apt to give and to make larger donations" after they have given once already.

The Excellence Fund is an annual fund raising program run by the UM Foundation, a non-profit organization established to raise private funds for UM. The foundation has raised $1.2 million for UM so far this school year, Walton said.

Walton said the phonathon has increased the number of alumni who donate to UM by more than 50 percent and has been "at least five times more productive" than a direct mail campaign would have been.

Walton said the money will be used to provide scholarships and other aid for UM, but that UM, not the Foundation, will decide where the money is to be spent.

Donations needed for KUFM fund drive to reach goal

By Timothy Huneck
Kaimin Contributing Reporter

Public Radio Week is half over and KUFM still needs support says William Marcus, production, promotion and development director for the station.

So far the annual fund raising drive has generated $34,000, which is a little more than one-third of the goal.

Marcus said that typically more people pledge money later in the week, adding that he is counting on the weekend audience "to come through big" for the station. To prompt weekend listeners to donate, KUFM will air some special programs, including a fund raising edition of Prairie Home Companion complete with "songs and stories about fund raising," a two-hour Gilbert and Sullivan program and a six-hour Bach to Bach program, featuring the music of the Bach family, Marcus said.

Pledges to the station "seem to be running higher" than last year, Marcus said, but he added that statistics are hard to compare because the drive lasts one day longer this year. In another attempt to raise money, special prizes are being offered to people who donate a certain amount, he said, adding that prizes are donated by listeners and have included baked goods, goats and jewelry.

Listeners and have included baked goods, goats and jewelry.

Marcus said announcers play a big role in the drive, because fund raising is a "psychological game" and "people respond to different things," including comic routines and threats not to play music until someone calls in.

KUFM needs to raise $100,000 to continue operating at its present level, Marcus said, adding that Reagan administration budget cuts to the Corporation for Public Broadcasting, where the station gets a large portion of its operating budget, have cut the amount of money the station receives by 30 percent.

KUFM requested $30,000 from the state legislature to help offset the cuts, but the request was turned down.

If the money is not raised, some of KUFM's programs will have to be cut, including the station's affiliation with National Public Radio, Marcus said.

University system striving to prepare high school students better for college

HELENA (AP) — A university system official will report Tuesday on progress toward stemming the tide of ill-prepared high school students entering college.

Carrol Krause, deputy commissioner of higher education, will address the state Board of Public Education during the second day of a two-day meeting at Miles Community College in Miles City.

Krause's presentation on the university system's efforts to develop a recommended college preparatory curriculum for high schools is one of several agenda items reflecting state and national concerns over the quality of basic education in public schools.

During committee meetings Monday, the public school governing board's Accreditation Committee will examine a "work plan" being developed this week by the board's Executive Secretary Hidde Van Duym for implementing recommendations of a state Task Force on Excellence in Education.

The task force recently issued a report outlining detailed new standards for measuring whether students in Montana schools are receiving a solid education.

Van Duym's plan is scheduled for discussion by the full board on Tuesday.

The committee will also discuss proposals for better enforcement of school accreditation requirements. In many cases currently, schools are given accreditation through a self-reporting process. More on-site visitation by state regulators has been proposed.

On Monday afternoon, the full board will also hear a presentation on how to develop better career information for use in Montana schools. The topic relates to a Task Force on Excellence recommendation saying that "knowledge of the elements of the world of work is essential for all students regardless of their post-high school plans."

Krause's report, addressing the needs of students who plan to go to college, will deal with work done so far by a committee representing each of the six university system campuses.

He said Wednesday he will outline a tentative compilation of specific curriculum subjects which the committee believes should be taken by high school students to best prepare them for college studies.

When the list is finalized, it will first be presented to the university system's Board of Regents, but the Board of Public Education is being kept up-to-date on the committee's work because it potentially affects course offerings in high schools, Krause said.

The list of subjects is heavily weighted toward science and "the 3-Rs, because that's where the problems have been," he said, referring to the reported growing need for college freshmen to take catch-up courses to sharpen basic reading, writing and math skills.

Krause said that while every high school, of course, offers language and math courses, there is evidence that the content of many of the courses with those designations do not truly prepare a student for college.

He said a survey showed there are 160 course titles in Montana high schools under the heading of English. But, he said, many of them do not provide basic reading and writing skills.

He said, for example, students in some schools can get as much graduation credit for working on the school newspaper as for taking an English literature course.

"We have to define more clearly what college preparatory course content should be," he said, adding that the university system itself must re-evaluate the content and quality of its general education requirements, especially for prospective teachers.

Journalism and Foreign Policy

Seymour Hersh Reports:

Seymour Hersh is probably the most important investigative reporter in America today. Winner of the Pulitzer Prize, Hersh is uniquely able to discuss the role of journalism in watching. His targets have ranged from Watergate to the giant multi-national corporations. In such a complicated and dangerous world, what can one journalist do? Seymour Hersh Reports.

Seymour Hersh, journalist and author, is one of the country's most distinguished reporters. He has been a Pulitzer Prize-winning reporter in Paris, South Dakota, to an award-winning foreign correspondent and a columnist for the New York Times. In 1970 he won the World Magazine Prize, the Sigma Delta Chi Distinguished Service Award, the George Polk Memorial Award and the Pulitzer Prize for international reporting for his coverage of the My Lai Massacre. In 1981 he won the Scripps Howard Public Service Award and the Polk Award for his coverage of the secret bombing of Cambodia. In 1984 he received the Sidney Hillman and Polk Awards for his reporting on domestic CIA spying. He is also the recipient of the John P. Foster, Jr. Award of the Press Award and the Drew Pearson Prize. In 1981 he won both the Polk Award for his reporting on the Iran-Contra affair and the Sigma Delta Chi Award for his New York Times article, "The Quillid Connection," on the sale of U.S. technology and weapons to Libya by former CIA agents Frank Terpil and Edwin Wilson. He has just completed a book, as he published early next year by Simon and Schuster, a writer on national security advice to Richard Nixon during Nixon's first term.

"The Hunger", a classic horror film that defies limitation

By Deb Scherer
Kaimin Fine Arts Editor

A modern day vampire story — can it work? Is it possible to resurrect Bela Lugosi and add a new dimension to the theme of Dracula?

"The Hunger," recently released by MGM-UA as the Anglo-American answer to "Diva," is a chilling new angle on the oft used theme of the Transylvanian count.

Review

In brief, a beautiful young vampire (vampirella?) and her mate (Catherine Deneuve and David Bowie) lure young punks from the discotheque to their palatial home, apparently with promises of an evening of orgiastic delight. Once trapped, the youths are viciously murdered and then fed upon by the young ghouls.

So far, so cliché. Neglecting the modern dress, is this not the traditional Count Dracula epic? Indeed, but then comes the twist.

One of our eternally young friends begins aging very rapidly. Overnight, the 30-year-old Bowie becomes a 200-year-old Bowie. Enter Susan Sarandon in the role of an expert on the process of aging. Unfortunately, she is unable to aid the vampire who subsequently asks of Deneuve (the only truly eternal vampire) that she release him.

This, however, turns out to be impossible. In fact, not only can she not kill him; he will never die. Her hatred of old age, however, is such that she cannot bear to have him about the house. Instead, she carries him up to the attic for storage; where, it seems, she has also stowed all her previous (and now quite aged) lovers.

Sarandon re-enters, still very much interested in the case of the aging vampire, and is soon seduced by Deneuve and made heir to Bowie's position.

Well, it's an interesting tale, but what does it all mean? At first glance, very little. The two primary messages of the film seem to be: Be careful who you go home with and, Vampires are people too. A little deeper, however, we find a more powerful theme; a rather harsh judgment on the way our culture both fears and loathes old age.

The strength of this film, however, is not its thematic content, but instead, comes from excellent acting and striking visual technique.

All three of the lead actors were devastatingly good. It was Deneuve's portrayal of the immortal vampire, though, that most sticks in the mind. Cool, calculating, and refined on the exterior, Deneuve-as-vampire was in reality — desperate, lonely, and driven in her passion to find eternal love.

It is impossible to hate her, even as she spurns her aged lovers time and time again in pursuit of one who can be, as she is, eternally young. Instead, she draws from us sympathy, perhaps even empathy-for who among us has not been both perpetrator and victim of the attitudes and actions which lead to predicaments such as Deneuve's?

"The Hunger" is, in addition, a haunting exercise in visual stimulation. In the opening scene, especially, we are lambasted with disturbing images. Discotheque dancers in leather and metal cut with quiet high-way shots and nightmare scenes of insane primates.

Strong, well-edited scenes of gore, in fact, punctuate the entire film. Which isn't to say that "The Hunger" is an exceedingly bloody film. It is a classic film of the horror genre, for the terror lies not so much in what we do see as in what we do not.

Billed as a "new wave" film, "The Hunger" is obviously aimed at a specific audience; appealing, perhaps, to a wider group than is "Diva," yet limited by its devices and style.

It seems, though, that MGM-UA may have underestimated the film for it seems to transcend the "new wave" limitations imposed upon it; encompassing also the realm of horror and exceptional story telling. The editing alone may well lift it above the arena it was designated to contend in. Extremely low-budget promotion may keep "The Hunger" from achieving mass recognition; too bad, for it most certainly deserves more than the cursory bit of attention given it by critics and viewers alike.

"The Hunger" is currently playing at the Village Twin and is rated R.

Ballet company will perform "Swan Lake"

The second act of Tchaikovsky's "Swan Lake" is among the principal pieces to be performed by the Pacific Northwest Ballet at the University Theater tomorrow night.

Choreographer Kent Stowell has created a version of the act which deviates slightly from that which has been traditionally performed. By incorporating part of the fourth act, Stowell has preserved the nuances of the dramatic conclusion that is present in the complete "Swan Lake," but is often missing in productions in which only the second act is performed.

Other pieces to be presented by the ballet company include: "Octet," "Allegro Brillante," and "Songs of Mahler."

Tickets for the event are $5 for students and senior citizens and $9, $7, and $6 for general admission. Tickets are available at the UC box office or by calling 243-4383.

World news

• Secretary of State George Shultz returned to Jerusalem, Israel yesterday saying he had a "very forthcoming position" from Lebanese officials on an agreement that could lead to withdrawal of Israeli troops from Lebanon. Shultz said he had a way "of getting at" the dispute over the future of Saad Haddad, the rebel Lebanese army major who runs an Israeli-backed militia in southern Lebanon. Israel's demand for a key role for Haddad in southern Lebanese security arrangements, and Lebanon's strong opposition, have created a key stumbling block to an agreement. Officials aboard Shultz' plane said the compromise involved giving Haddad a key position in southern Lebanon, but not an overall command role. Shultz plans to go to Damascus, Syria on Saturday to meet with Syrian President Hafez Assad. The Israelis have said they won't withdraw an estimated 25,000 soldiers from Lebanon until the Syrians have agreed to pull out their estimated 40,000 troops.

THE NATION

• President Ronald Reagan said yesterday the United States would give "serious consideration" to the latest Soviet proposal to reduce medium-range nuclear weapons in Europe. Asked whether the proposal, advanced by Soviet leader Yuri Andropov on Tuesday, was "positive," Reagan said "yes." The president said this was so because the Soviets had offered to reduce weapons numbers to those of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization forces by counting warheads as well as missiles and airplanes. "We're going to give this serious consideration," Reagan said in an interview with six reporters. "This is what we should be negotiating."

• William Ruckelshaus vowed yesterday in Washington that there would be "no hit lists ... no sweetheart deals" if he is confirmed to head the embattled Environmental Protection Agency. Ruckelshaus — whose confirmation is virtually assured — told a Senate hearing considering his nomination that some of what's happened at the EPA has been "abuse of process."

MONTANA

• A 44-year-old Missoula man, who was flying from here to Rock Springs, Wyo., was killed Tuesday when his single-engine airplane crashed into a snow-covered mountain peak near Alpine Junction, Wyo. Authorities said yesterday that the body of Gerald Ward was recovered from the peak at 7 a.m. yesterday.

• The Big Mountain Ski Resort in Whitefish said yesterday that the 1982-83 ski season was more successful than the previous year with skier visits up 4.6 percent and gross revenues up 10 percent. Officials said expanded night skiing had a significant impact on this year's skier turnout.

Sullivan wins local pageant

By Georell Copps

Kaimin Contributing Reporter

Bridey Sullivan, a University of Montana sophomore in music who wants to "sing and entertain" after graduating, got a head start on her career ambition last Saturday night when she was named Miss Missoula County for 1983.

The appointment will be a "full-time job," she said, "involving a year of singing and entertaining at various pageants across the state."

"By doing that, I'll be able to get a feel of whether or not that's what I want to do for the rest of my life," Sullivan said.

Sullivan, who sang a song titled "That's Life" in the talent portion of the contest, won a $270 scholarship.

Contestants were judged on talent, a swimsuit presentation, an evening-gown competition and on a private interview which was held before the pageant. Talent counted for 50 percent of the total score.

Beth La Velle, a UM freshman in music, won both the first runner-up and the congeniality award and Darlene Richert, a UM sophomore in business administration, was the second runner-up.

Others competing in the pageant were: Lisa Duffin, a UM sophomore in business administration, Leigh Kirkpatrick, a UM junior in management, Nola Thompson, a high school senior from Frenchtown, and Carrie Kohl, a graduate of Sentinel High School.

The pageant was time consuming, Sullivan said, since it required a month of practice. The contestants modeled in five fashion shows before the pageant.

Sullivan attended Arizona State University in 1981-82 on a music scholarship but transferred to UM this year because "ASU was too big and there were 700 voice majors."

In June, Sullivan will compete in the 1983 Miss Montana Pageant, in which she was first runner-up in 1981 representing Bozeman, against 13 other contestants.

Library dean candidate would work for visibility

By Melanie Williamson
Kaimin Reporter

Library dean candidate Michael Herbison said he would like to see the University of Montana Maureen and Mike Mansfield Library gain more visibility on campus, but added it would be "pretty presumptuous to advocate any major changes."

Herbison, library director at the University of Colorado at Colorado Springs, said last week a library dean must represent the library, as well as supervise its operation and financing. He said if he is chosen to be UM's library dean, he will spend half of his time away from the library working to gain more support for it and to increase its visibility.

Herbison said one way he would accomplish those goals would be to organize a library tri-athlon similar to one that is run annually in Jackson Hole, Wyo., which includes a downhill ski run, a bicycle ride and a river float to an awards party downstream.

Such an event, he said, would bring both fun and visibility to the library and would allow students to play a more active part in library support. He said UM's annual library run is good, but dull.

He said he would also have a "bitch book," such as the one in the University of Colorado library, for comments, compliments and gripes from university students and faculty.

Herbison said the University of Colorado is different from UM, both in size and in the type of students enrolled.

UC is a "commuter college," he said. It has no dormitories or sports teams; the average student is 28 or older and 85 percent of the students work either full- or part-time.

UC also has more dollars per student allotted to the library than does UM, even though UC's programs are not as extensive, he said. UC's library budget was $338,000 for 3,400 students, which comes to about $99 per student, he said. UM's library was allowed about $66 per student this year.

Herbison said the state should better support the university system, so one department wouldn't have to take from others to get the finances it needs. The money the university system has to allot to its different departments is not growing as fast as it should to keep the university operating efficiently, he said, and the administration is aware of a lack of funding.

But the burden of funding shouldn't be shifted to the students, he said. "That amounts to disenfranchising students," he said, "and the states should contribute more."

He said "there is a correlation between quality education and the success of the state" and that a state won't be able to attract clean industry to an area without quality education.

Universities are a big factor in recruiting clean industry because of the education and lifestyle of second- and third-level executives and because educated people generally don't want to lose the culture that is in either a city or a university environment, he said.

Herbison said he had accomplished everything he set out to do at UC, and so he began looking for a new job a few years ago. At UC he was hired to set up and staff a new library and with that done he's ready for a greater challenge, he said.

Herbison is one of five finalists being interviewed by a search committee during April and May for the position of UM library dean. Erling Oelz has been acting dean since Earle Thompson, the former dean, retired last year.

The new dean will begin work July 1 with a salary of between $38,000 and $43,000 per year. The salary range was set by the Montana State Board of Regents and the final decision as to who will be hired will be made by the UM administration.

The second dean finalist, Dale Carrison, library dean at Mankato State University in Mankato, Minnesota, was interviewed May 2.

The remaining three candidates will be on campus and available for UM faculty and student questions during open meetings on the following days: May 9, Douglas Bush, assistant university librarian for information services at Brigham Young University in Provo, Utah; May 12, William Newman, library dean at Tulane University in New Orleans, La.; and May 19, Ruth Patrick, assistant director of library operations at Wayne State University in Detroit, Mich. All open meetings will be from 3:10 to 4 p.m. in Liberal Arts 139.

Referendum

Stroble said that even had the L.A. polling place been open, it's doubtful 25 percent of the students would have voted. He added that though he wasn't happy the poll was closed, he has no plans to lodge a complaint.

Students for Honest Elections member Karen Moulding said that the problems at the L.A. Building definitely hurt their chances of getting 25 percent. But she said she doubted she would take any action because the poll was closed.

"I'm getting a little tired of the whole thing," she said.

Hallsten said that the computer used in the UC was late in arriving from Structural Data Systems, who donated it for the election. There were also problems with the telephone hook-ups that kept the UC poll from opening until 9:15, while the Lodge poll opened at 8:05. The polls were supposed to open at 8:00.

The expense of holding the referendum was much less than had been expected, Hallsten said, after the ballots had been counted. Central Board allocated $430 for the referendum at last week's CB meeting amid considerable debate over whether ASUM should absorb the cost. But Hallsten said that because of lower than expected computer use costs, expenses were less than $200.
